WHERE ARE THEY NOW?

OUTBACK JACK

He was WWE's answer to Crocodile Dundee—a 6-foot-6, 300-pound outdoorsman from the Northern Territory of Australia, who walked to the ring to the classic song, "Tie Me Kangaroo Down, Sport." The fans took to him immediately.

These days, Outback Jack, who goes by his given name of Peter Stilsbury, has traded in his alligator tooth necklace, hunting knife and leather vest for a pressed suit and a briefcase. He now lives in the Ft. Lauderdale, Florida area, where he works as an international broker.

"King Kong Bundy initially got me interested in the financial markets back in 1987," Stilsbury says, "and I've been into them ever since. At first, I just did IPOs and options, then I switched over to commodity trading, and now I also trade exotic derivatives and consult as a foreign exchange hedger."

As a youngster, Stilsbury spent a great deal of time with an uncle named Jack. In time, he picked up the nickname "Little Jack," which eventually morphed into his Outback Jack ring moniker. Had it not been for a stroke of luck, Stilsbury would have never even made it to WWE, or the United States, for that matter.

"I was working at a cattle station in Humpty Doo," Stilsbury says, "and we would watch the WWE shows on satellite television. Then one day in 1986, WWE turned up doing a tour of Australia, and lo and behold, they came into the pub I frequented. I brought them around, showed them what the Outback was like, and then about six weeks after that, I got a letter in the mail from WWE, inviting me to come over to the U.S. and wrestle. I've been here ever since."

Outback Jack left WWE in 1988 to develop his own television show. Two years later, he was married, and children soon followed (he has a son and a daughter, who are 14 and 10, respectively).

Unfortunately, due to a series of head injuries—a helicopter accident in 1984 and a grueling match against Killer Khan in 1988—Outback Jack has a 273-degree retinal tear, and needs to wear an eye patch to keep his equilibrium. Despite the injury, Stilsbury still lives a normal life, which includes spending time with his family, working the financial markets, and daily outdoor walks. He also still watches WWE programming from time to time.

"I do miss the business," Outback Jack says. "I mean, I was just a fan, so for me, wrestling for WWE was an absolute adventure—it was like Alice in Wonderland. When I watch it now, I can't believe how it's changed so dramatically. It's undergone a humongous metamorphosis since I was there, but it's still just as entertaining."

Dear Editor,
Wow! What did we do to deserve another Stacy pictorial ("Springtime with Stacy," April Raw)? Whatever it is, we'll keep it up! Your spring-themed pictures definitely helped throw off the winter blues. With the warm weather coming on fast, here's hoping we'll be seeing more of the Babe of the Year in upcoming issues. Thanks again!

Honoring the Legends

Dear Editor,
I was ecstatic when the April issue of Raw Magazine arrived and I saw my favorite WWE Superstar of all time, the immortal Hulk Hogan, on the cover. For a while, I thought I might never see him gracing the cover of a WWE magazine again, as he has done so many times in the past. With his recent induction into the WWE Hall of Fame, I am so happy you further honored him with another cover appearance, and a great article to go with it!

Dear Editor,
What a great cover story in your April issue! Not only was it wonderful to relive the career of Hulk Hogan, but the profiles of the other inductees made for incredible reading as well. It was so much fun to catch up with some of WWE's legendary Superstars. Thank you for a pair of excellent articles!

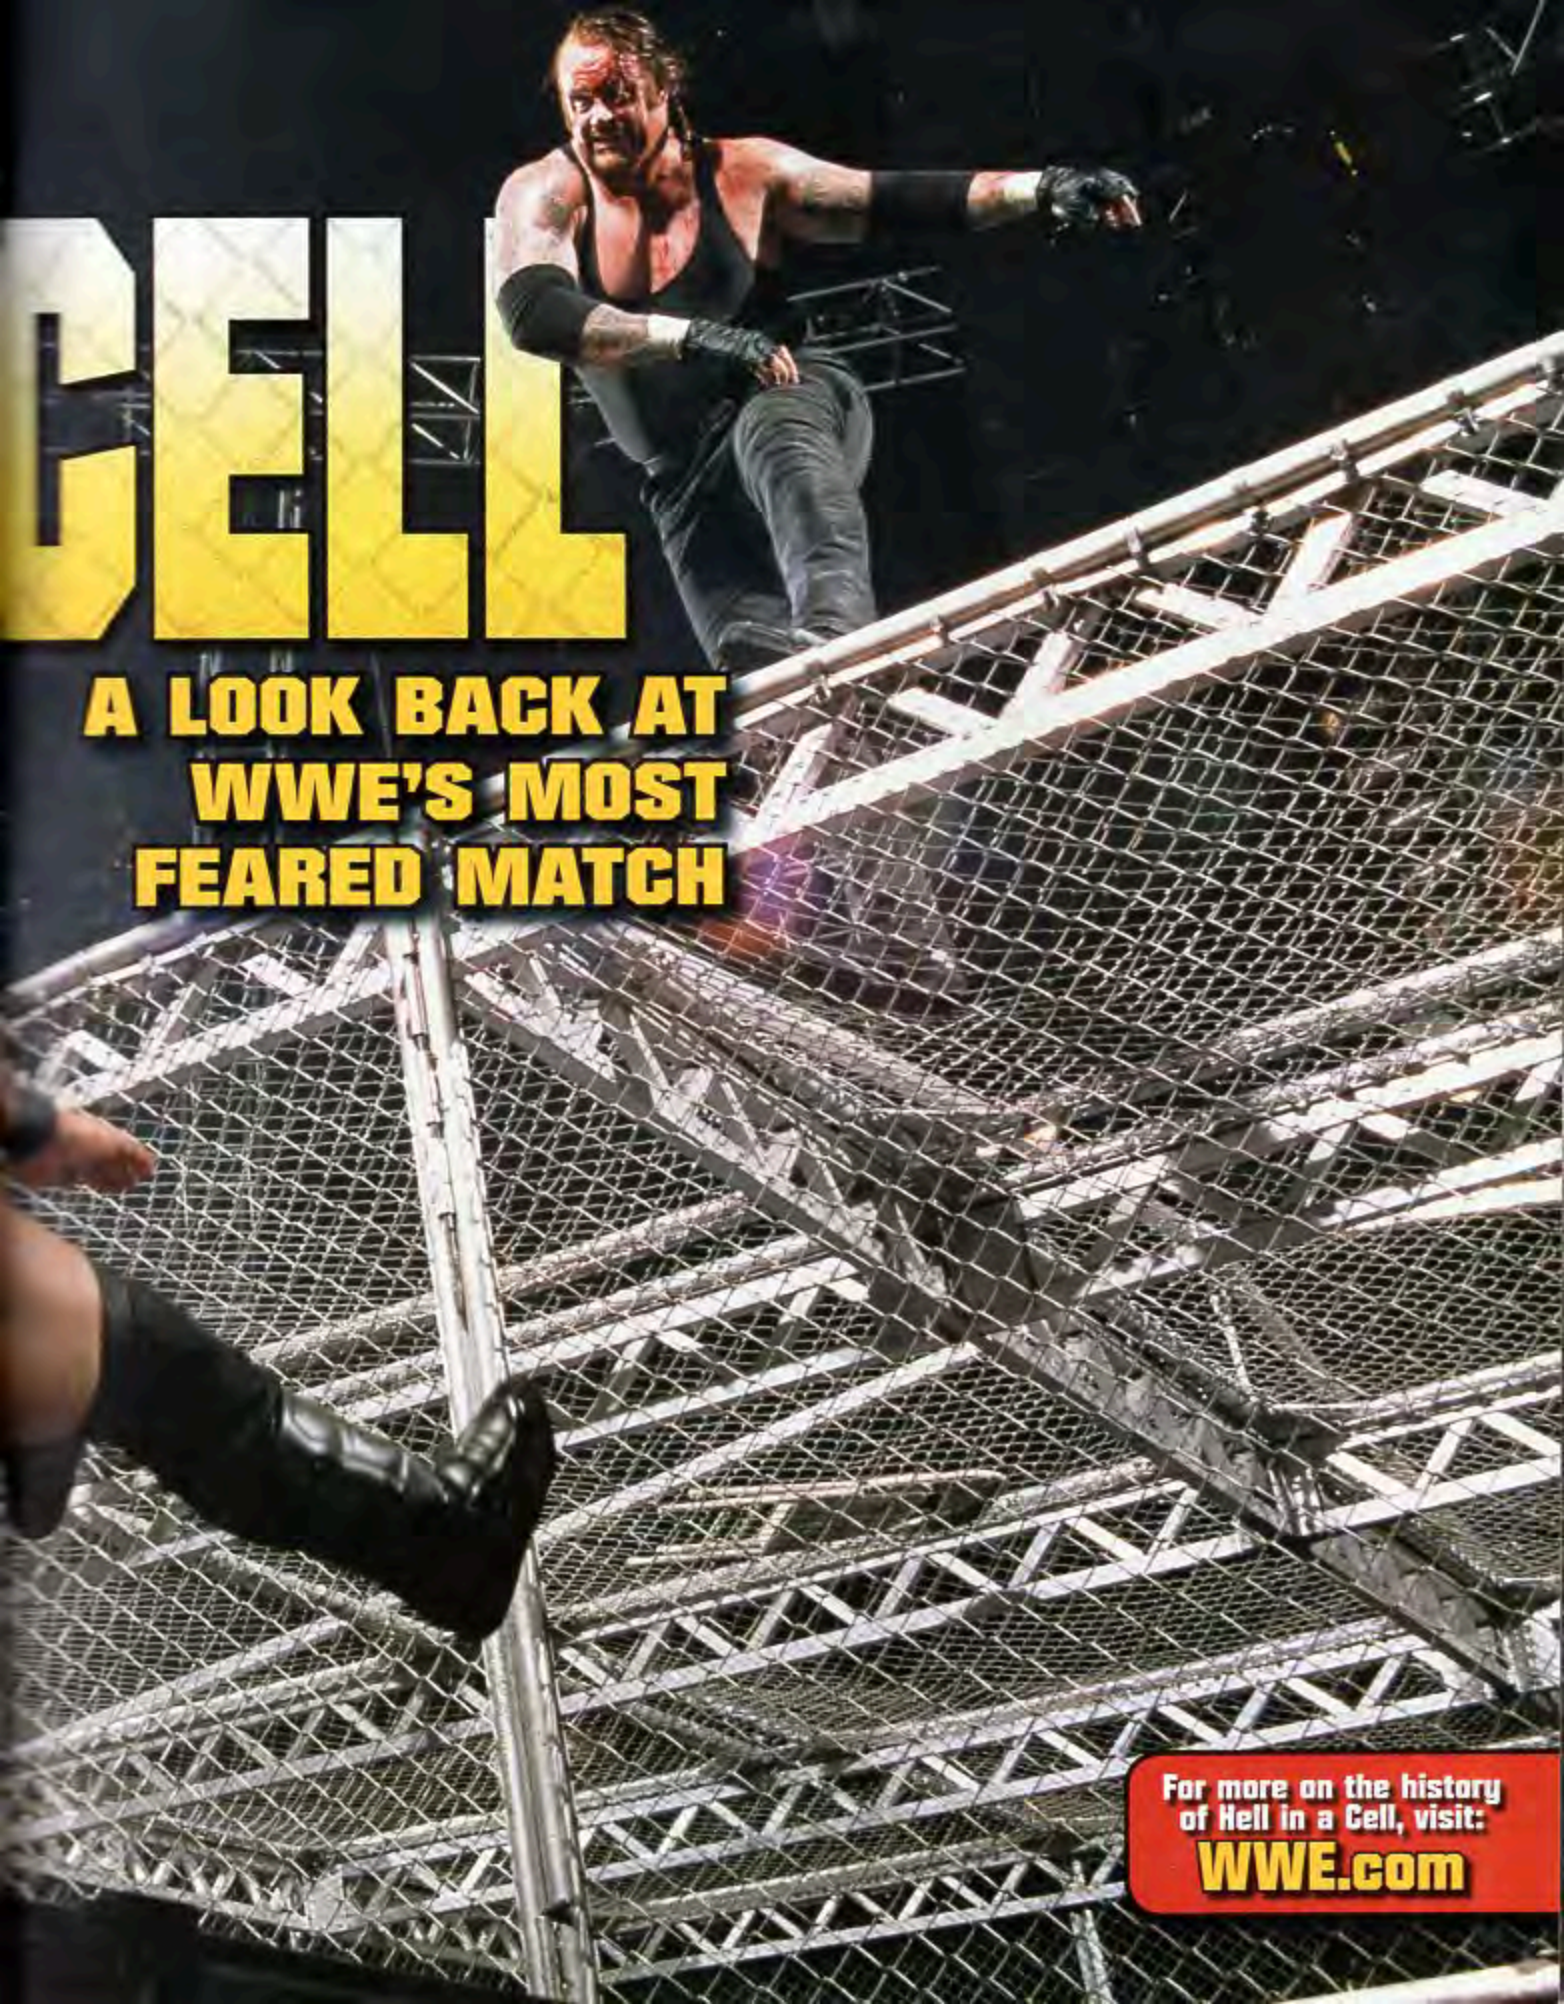
HELL IN A

BY JEREMY BROWN

It is a massive construction of unforgiving steel, in which a select number of WWE Superstars have engaged in some of the most intense confrontations ever witnessed. Careers have been shortened, bones have been broken, and WWE history has been made, time and time again. Nothing can prepare you for Hell in a Cell.

Since its debut nearly a decade ago, Hell in a Cell has grown to become one of the most anticipated, most talked-about and, yes, most feared, matches in WWE. The punishment suffered by those individuals who dare to step within its reinforced steel confines is nothing short of brutal, testing the very limits of human endurance. It is a match that can turn even the most scientific technical wrestler into a wild animal, drenched in sweat and fighting for survival.

Over the years, the Hell in a Cell match has created innumerable moments that have permanently etched themselves into the memories of fans. Be it death-defying brilliance or sheer brutality, these matches have long been something to talk about. Here's a look back at some of the moments that have defined WWE's most vicious match.



CELL

A LOOK BACK AT WWE'S MOST FEARED MATCH

For more on the history of Hell in a Cell, visit:
WWE.com

Shawn Michaels vs. Undertaker

Bad Blood*, October 5, 1997

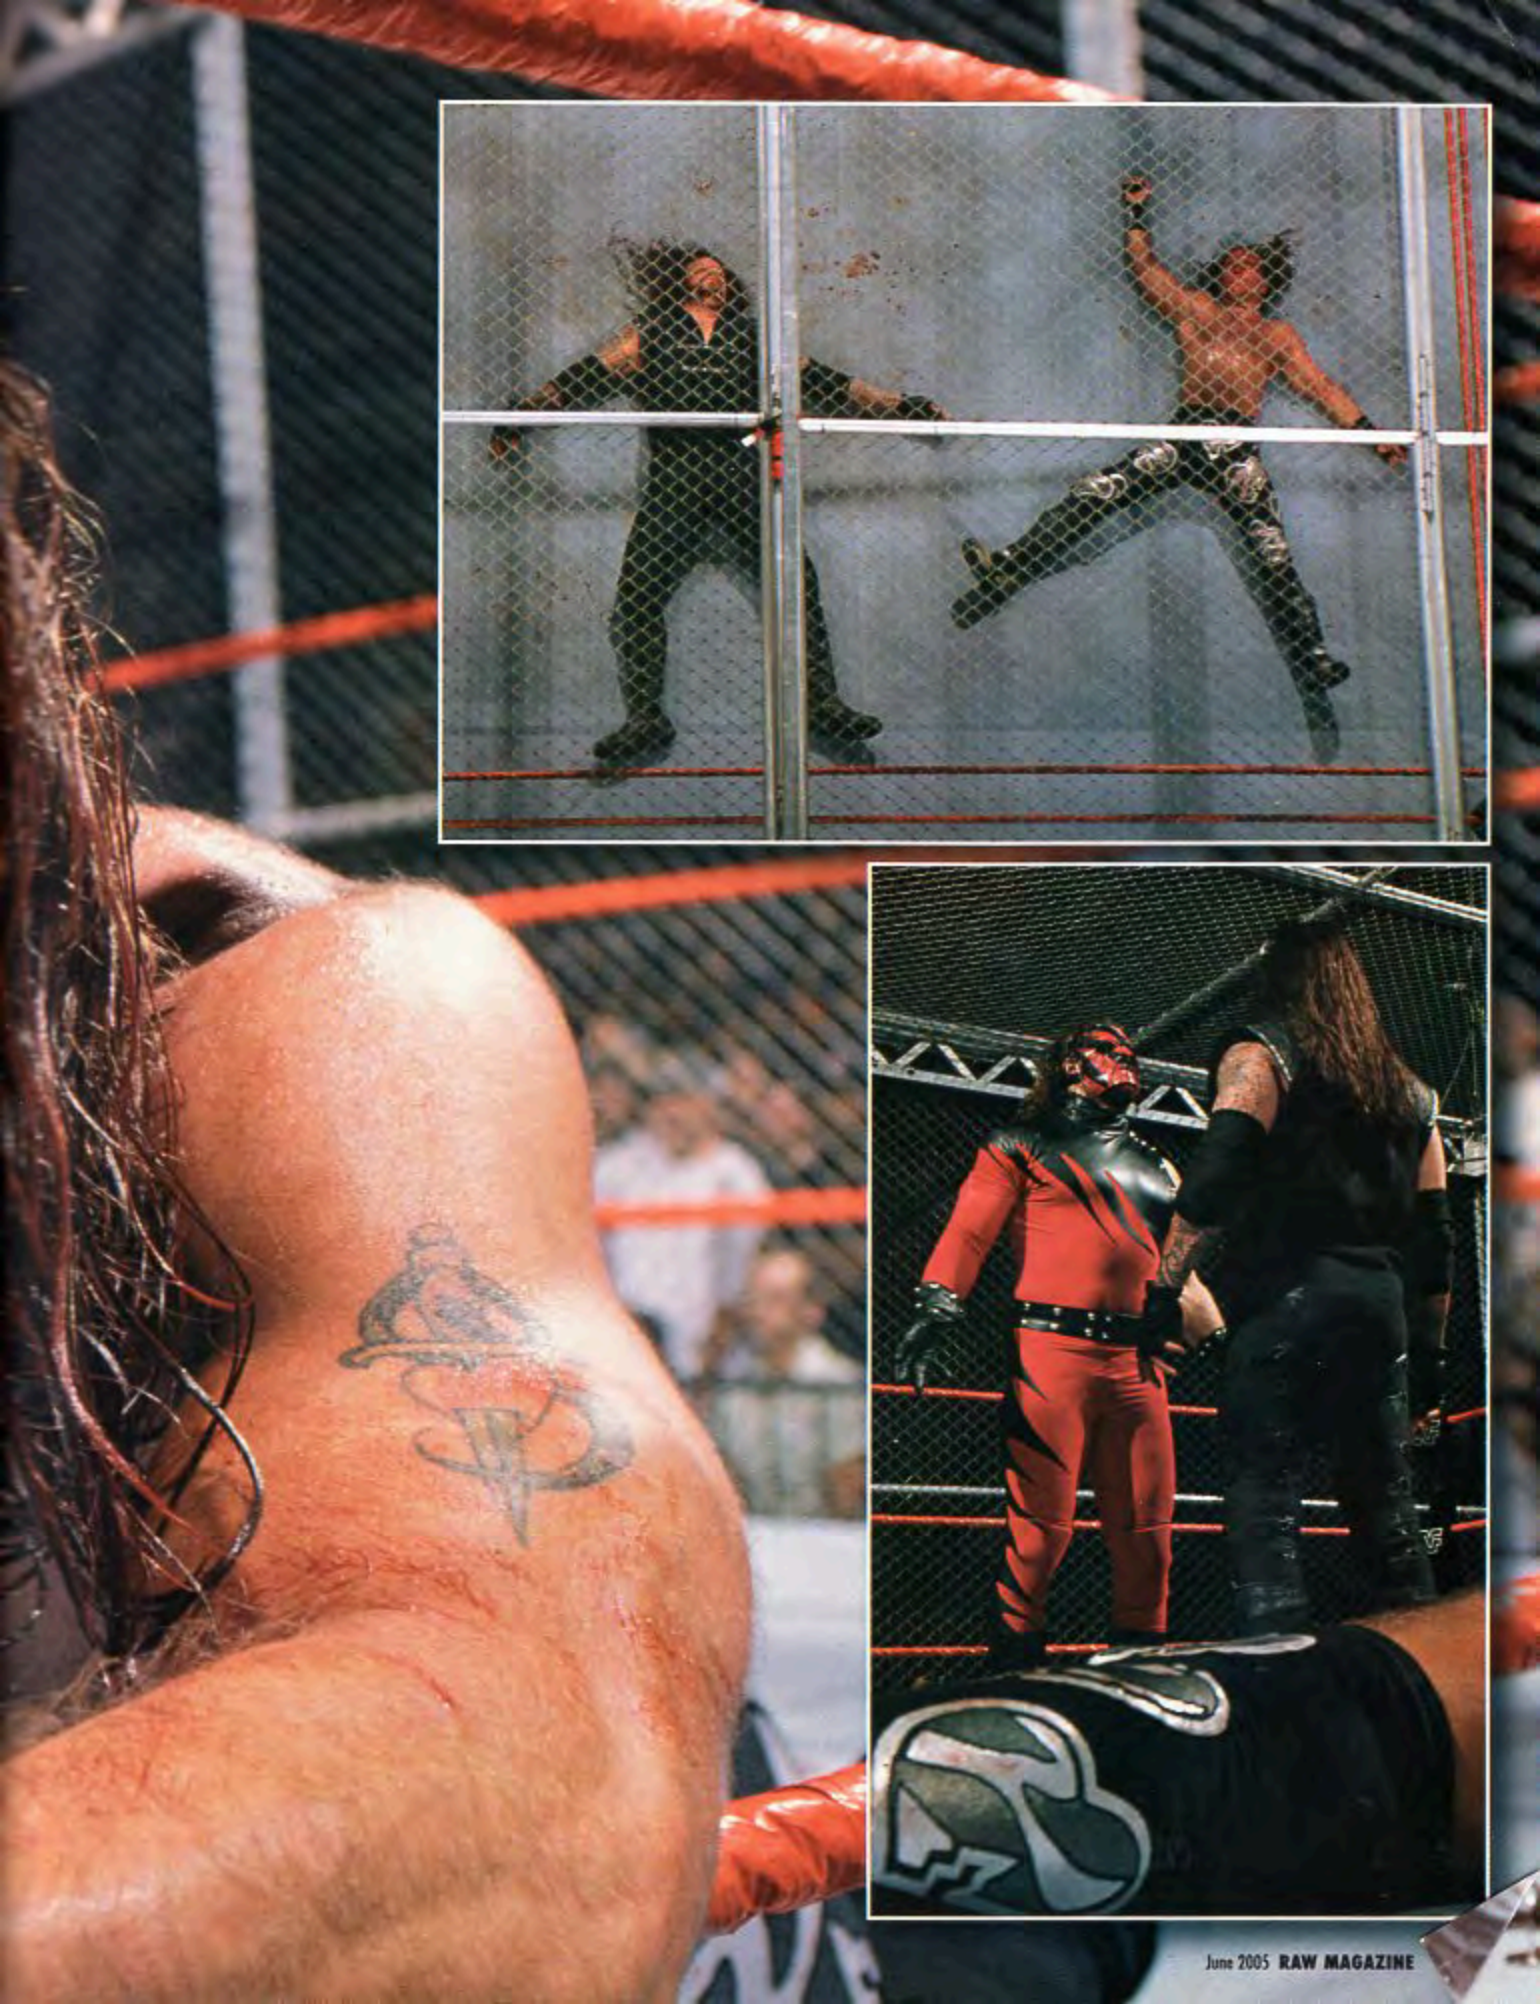
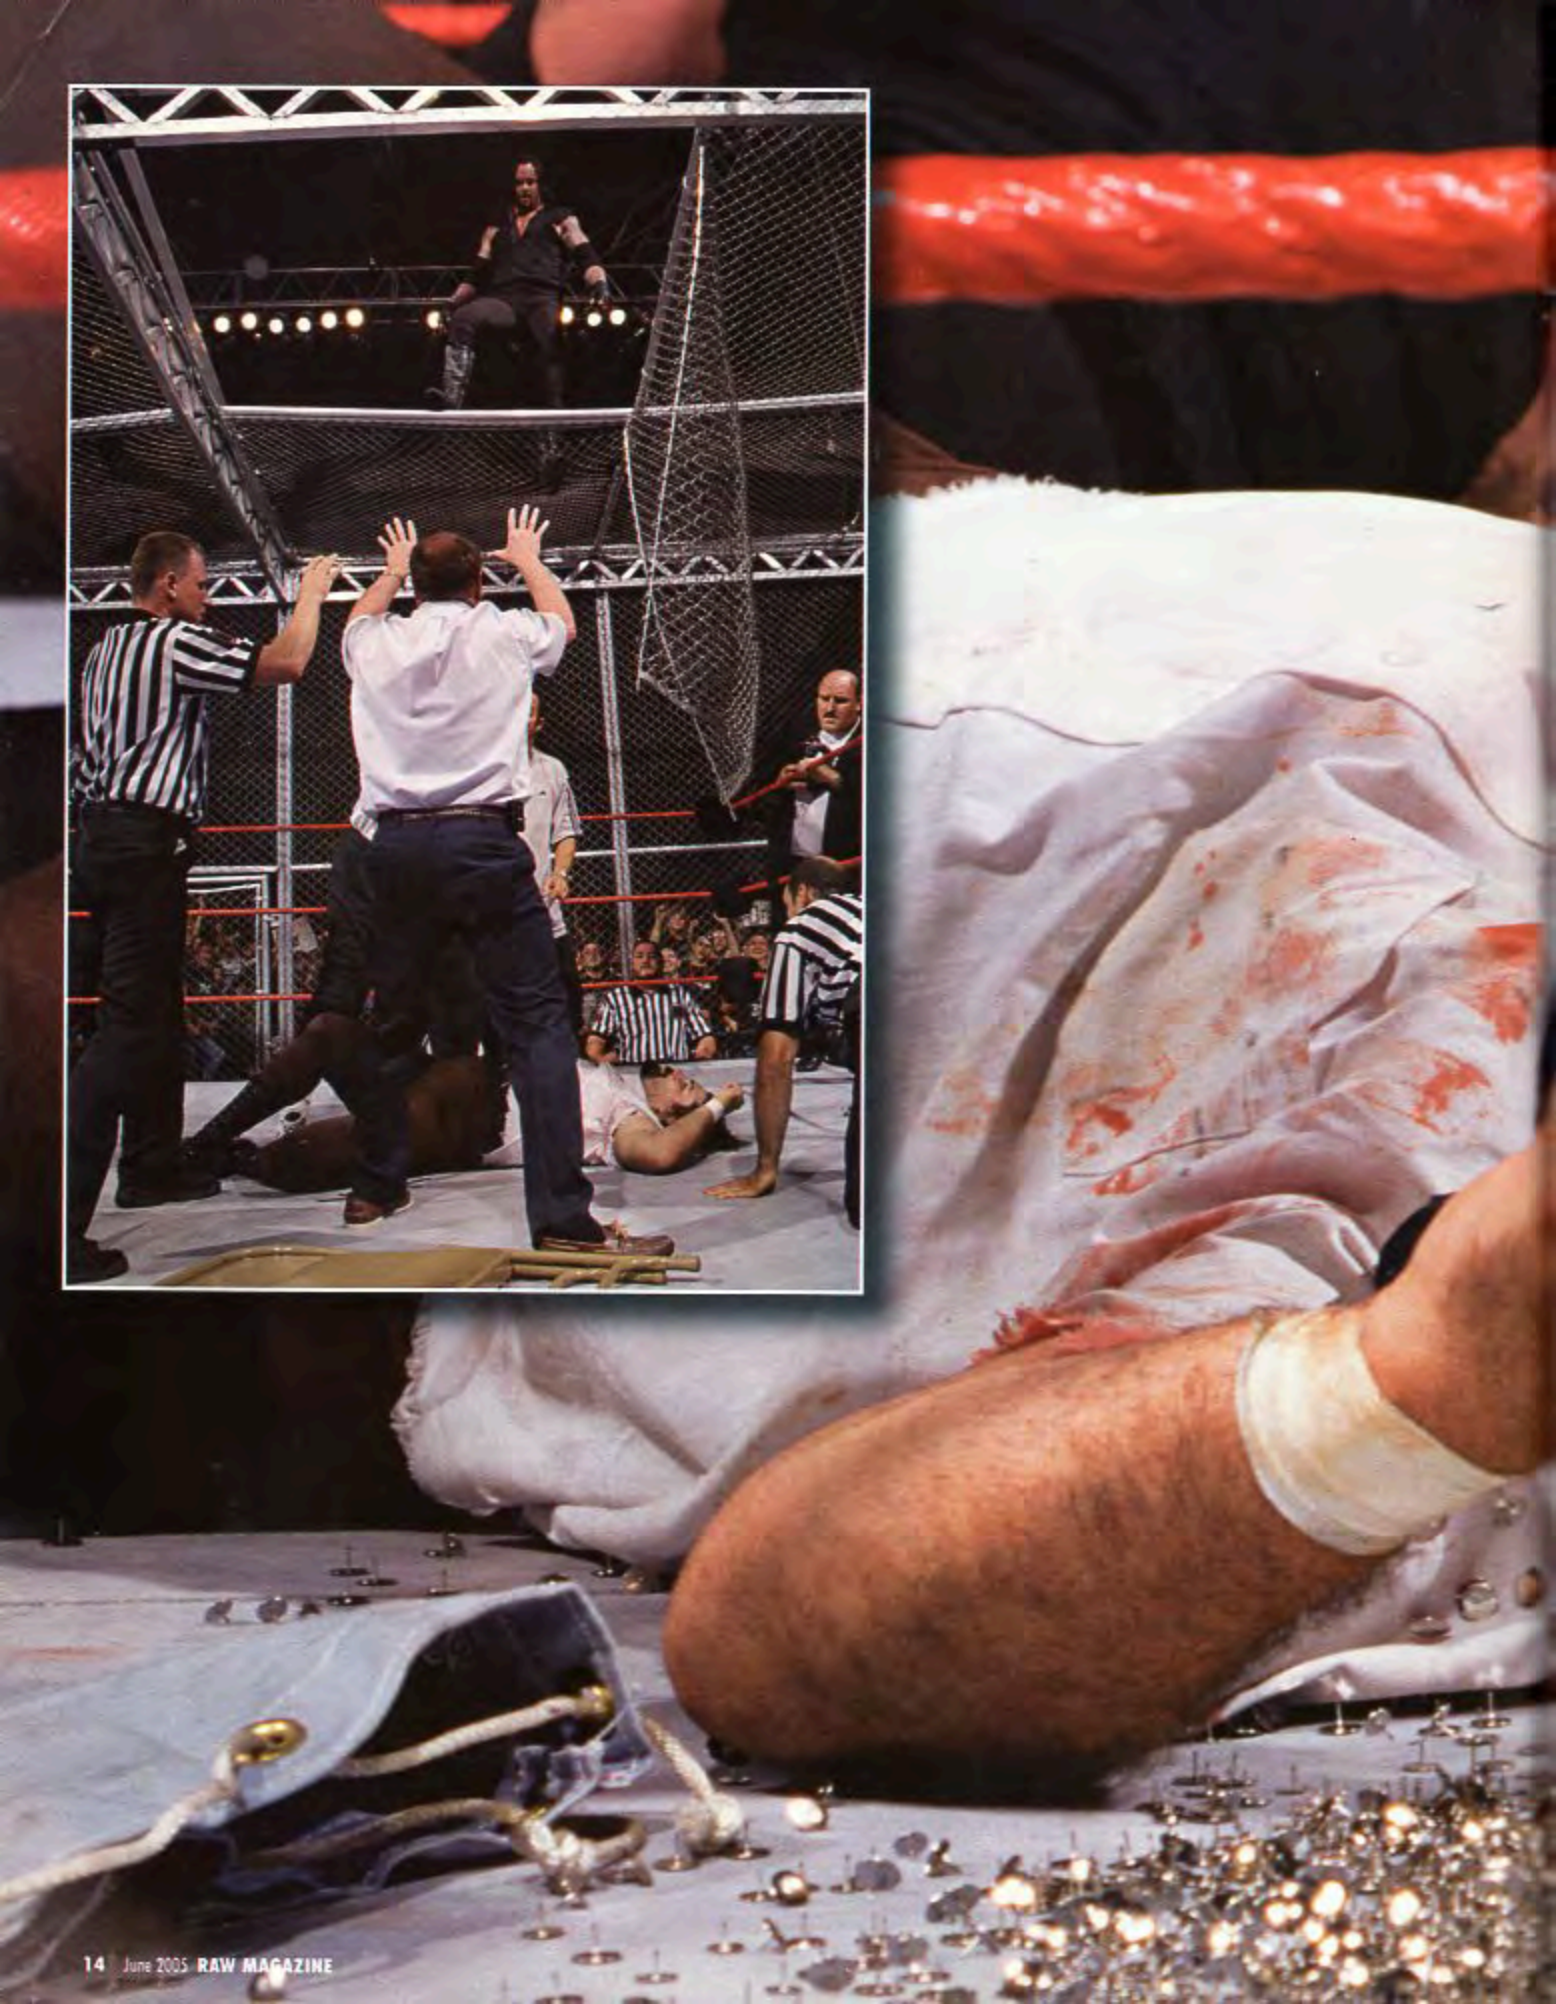
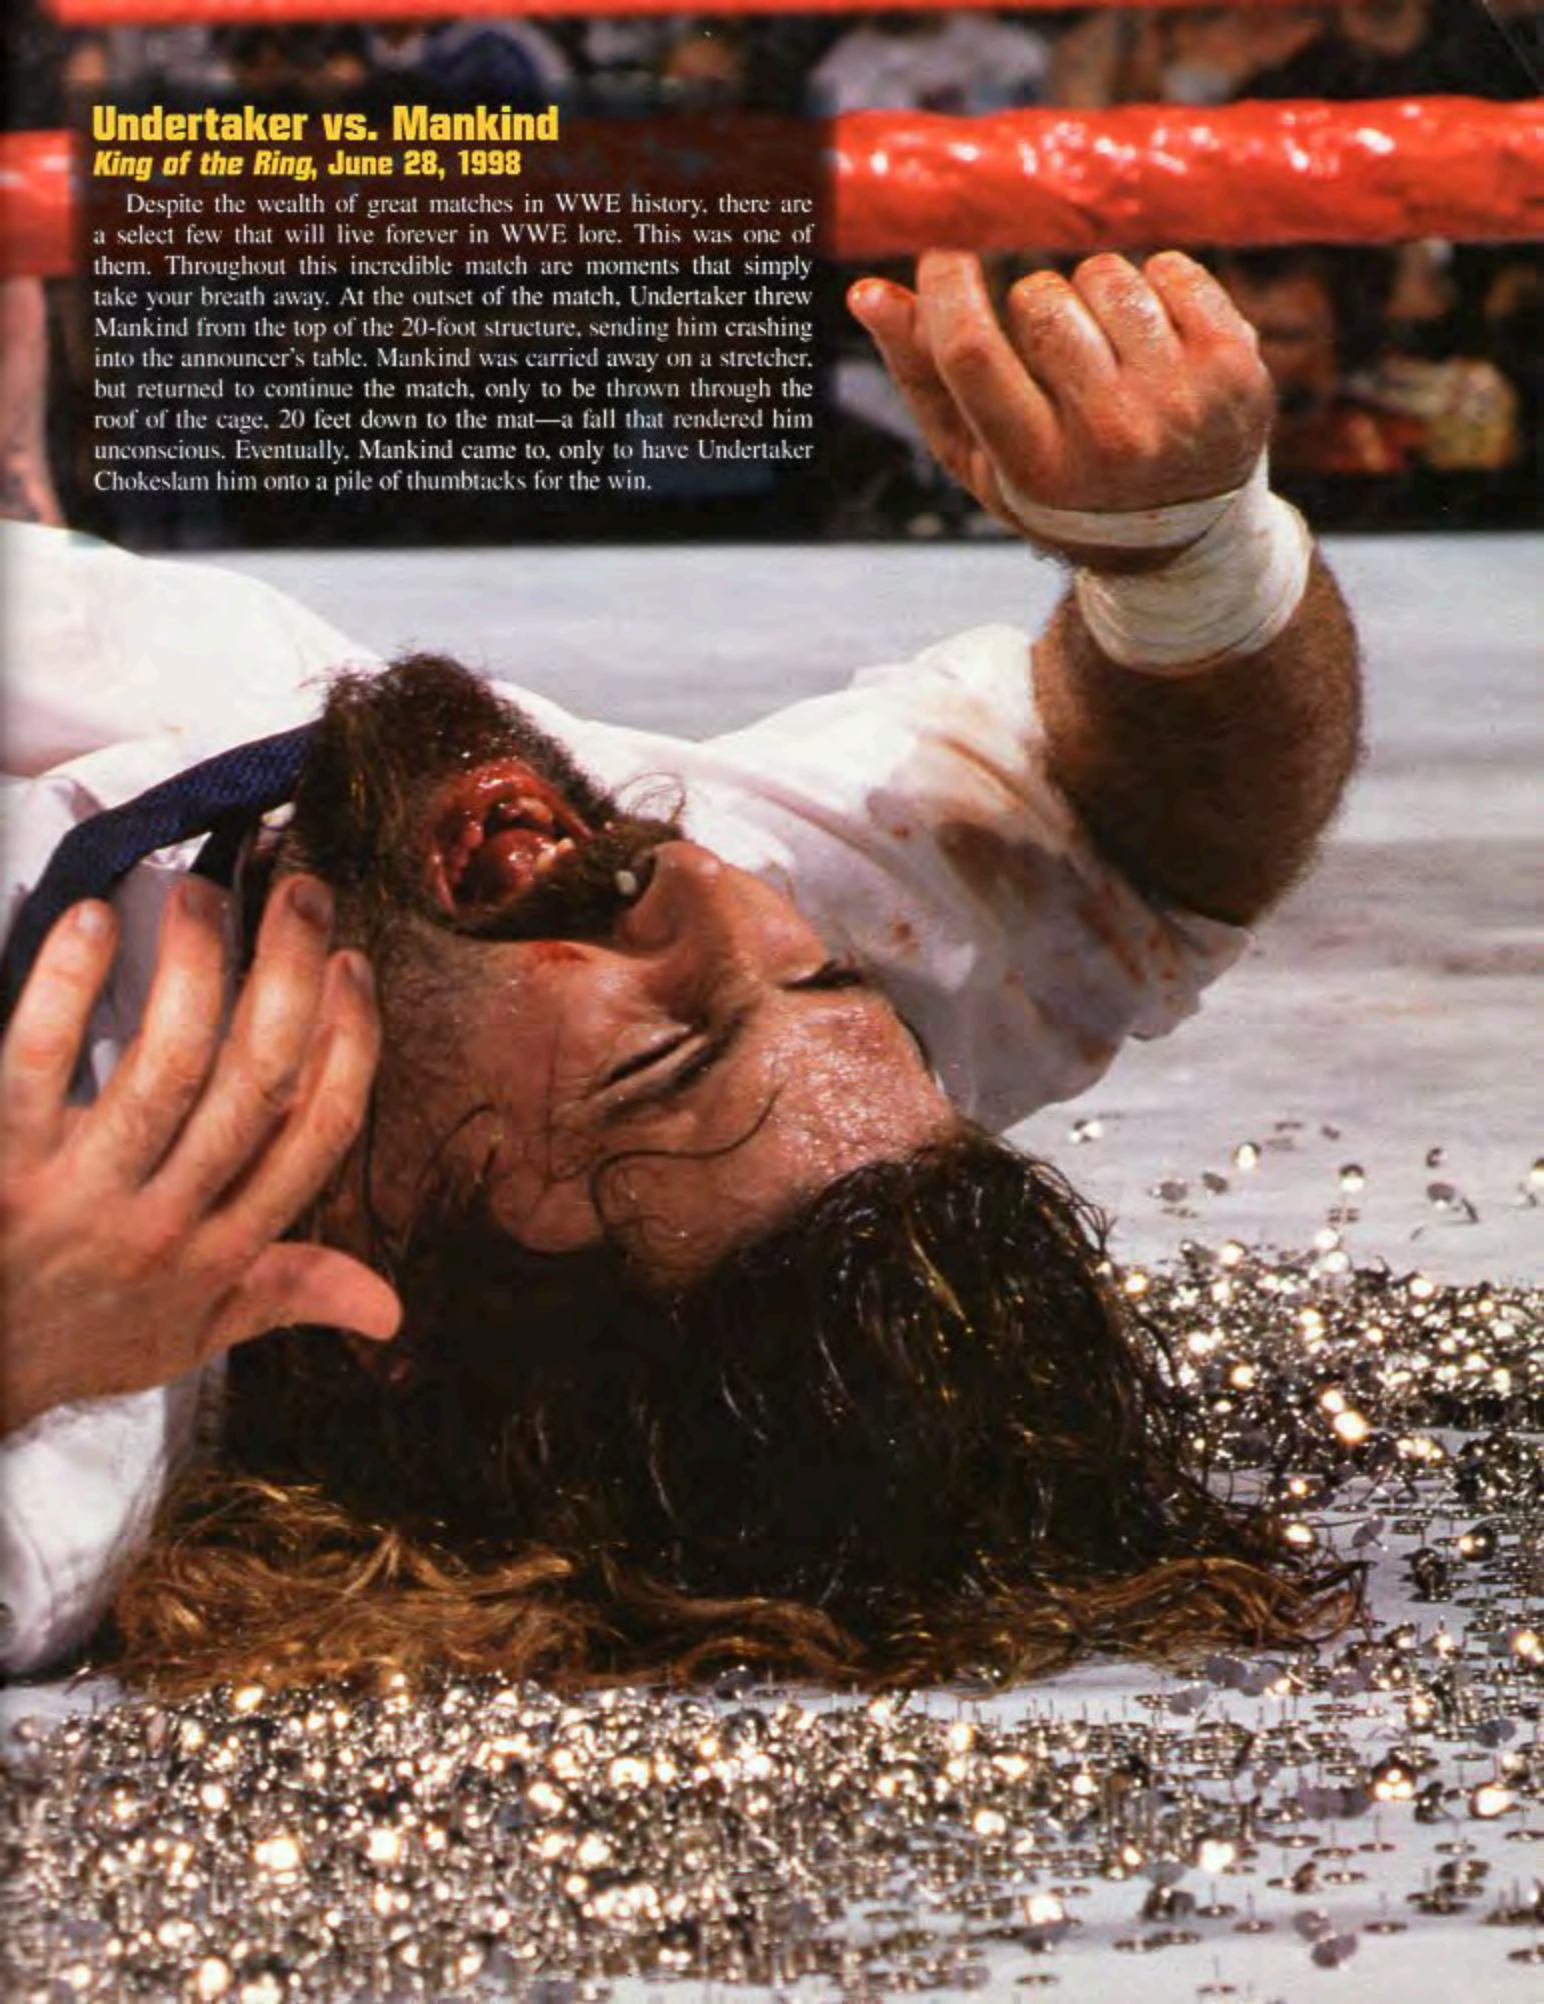
The first-ever Hell in a Cell match set the tone, and the bar, for all the matches to follow. After months of anticipation, fans finally saw the culmination of the rivalry between Shawn Michaels and Undertaker. The result was one of the most grueling, brutal matches WWE has ever seen, and a contest fans still talk about to this day. Both Superstars battled for more than 20 minutes before the "Deadman" set HBK up for a Tombstone. Just as he was about to secure the win, 'Taker's long-lost brother, Kane, made his stunning first appearance. Kane literally tore the door off the Cell before Tombstoning his brother in retribution for his childhood misdeeds. Michaels took the opening to make the cover and claim victory.







Undertaker vs. Mankind

King of the Ring*, June 28, 1998

Despite the wealth of great matches in WWE history, there are a select few that will live forever in WWE lore. This was one of them. Throughout this incredible match are moments that simply take your breath away. At the outset of the match, Undertaker threw Mankind from the top of the 20-foot structure, sending him crashing into the announcer's table. Mankind was carried away on a stretcher, but returned to continue the match, only to be thrown through the roof of the cage, 20 feet down to the mat—a fall that rendered him unconscious. Eventually, Mankind came to, only to have Undertaker Chokeslam him onto a pile of thumbtacks for the win.

Undertaker vs. Big Boss Man

WrestleMania XV*, March 28, 1999

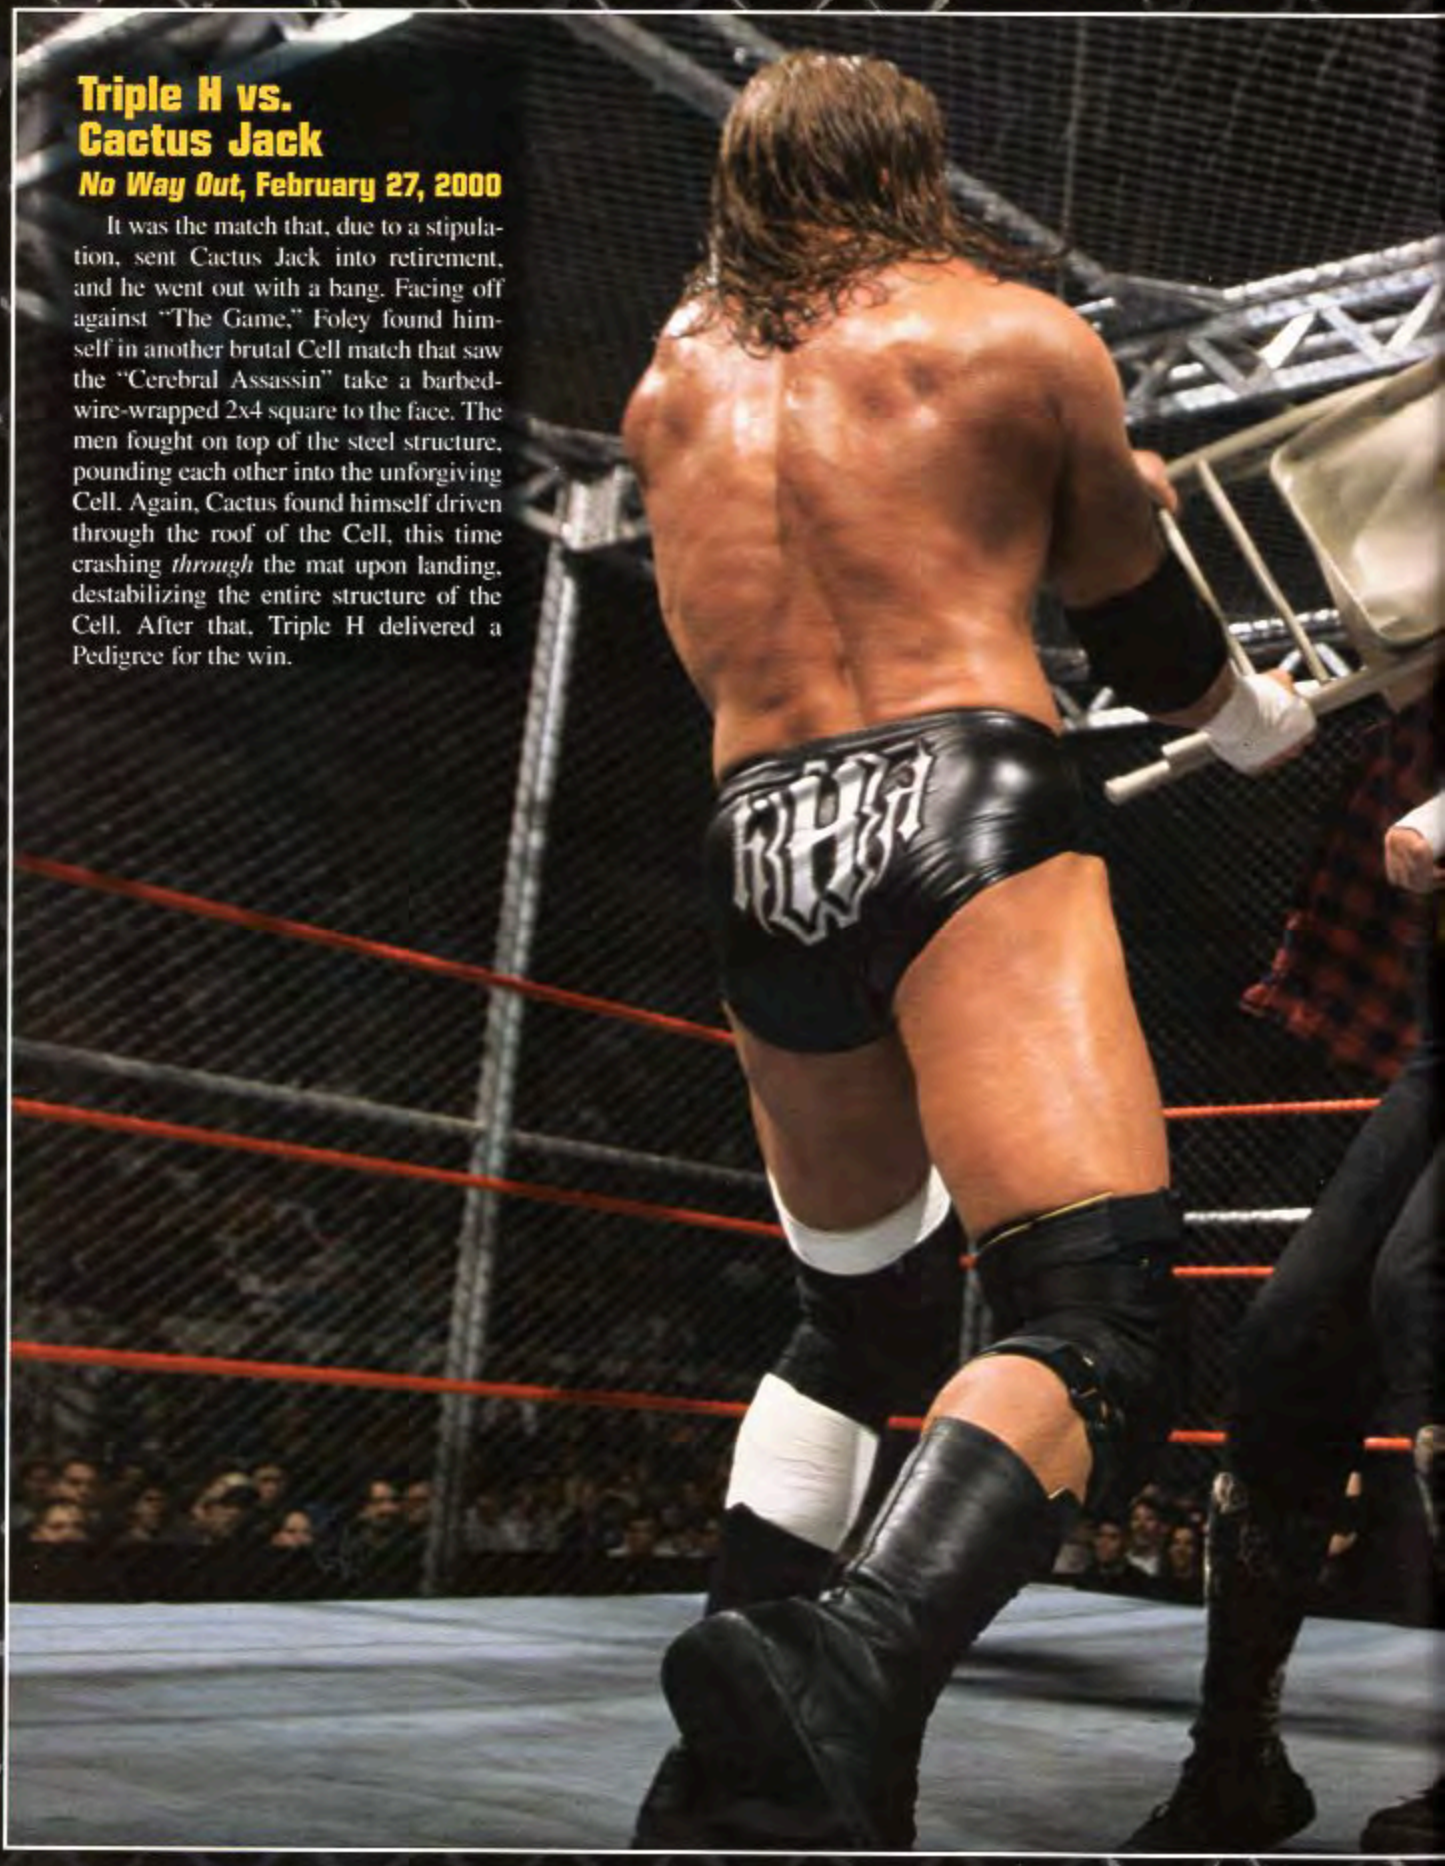
Undertaker scored his eighth WrestleMania win by taking out the Corporation's enforcer. Boss Man attempted to take out the "Deadman" by handcuffing him to the Cell wall and pounding him with a nightstick. As punishing as it was, however, it was not enough to put 'Taker down. He recovered, ramming Boss Man into the steel before finishing him with a powerful Tombstone for the win.



Triple H vs. Cactus Jack

No Way Out, February 27, 2000

It was the match that, due to a stipulation, sent Cactus Jack into retirement, and he went out with a bang. Facing off against "The Game," Foley found himself in another brutal Cell match that saw the "Cerebral Assassin" take a barbed-wire-wrapped 2x4 square to the face. The men fought on top of the steel structure, pounding each other into the unforgiving Cell. Again, Cactus found himself driven through the roof of the Cell, this time crashing through the mat upon landing, destabilizing the entire structure of the Cell. After that, Triple H delivered a Pedigree for the win.

ACTION

Kurt Angle vs. Triple H vs. Steve Austin vs. The Rock vs. Undertaker vs. Rikishi

Armageddon, December 10, 2000

Putting these six Superstars together in a confined space, the only possible result was total mayhem. And that's precisely what fans at Alabama's Jefferson Civic Center got. Each man battled the other until, without warning, Vince McMahon and his stooges arrived in a flatbed truck and attempted to tear the Cell apart. While their efforts were thwarted by a sudden appearance from Mick Foley, the men were able to tear the Cell's door off, giving the combatants the chance to take the fight outside. It was here that Rikishi received a Chokeslam from Undertaker, falling from the top of the Cell and landing hard on the flatbed truck. Eventually, Angle pinned The Rock to remain WWE Champion.

Triple H vs. Chris Jericho

Judgment Day, May 19, 2002

"The Game" and Jericho slugged it out with no mercy, utilizing tables, chairs, a barbed-wire 2x4 and a sledgehammer in the hopes of taking the other out. Eventually, the "Cerebral Assassin" delivered a shattering Pedigree to Y2J atop the Cell to bring the match to an end. In an interesting sidenote that proves that no one is safe inside the Cell, Tim White suffered a separated shoulder while refereeing this barbaric match!

Brock Lesnar vs. Undertaker

No Mercy, October 20, 2002

It was no surprise that this bout between Lesnar and 'Taker—two of the most physical presences of the last decade—produced one of the most brutal battles in WWE history. Even Lesnar's manager, Paul Heyman, was not spared, being pounded into the cage by 'Taker. Battling with an injured arm, the "Deadman" still managed to take the fight to Lesnar. This epic confrontation took a great deal out of both competitors, and proved once again why Hell in a Cell is the ultimate place to settle any rivalry.

Triple H vs. Kevin Nash

Bad Blood, June 15, 2003

For this incredible bout, Mick Foley was assigned as a special guest-referee. Nash came out strong, nailing his former friend Triple H with a clothesline and a crippling forehead shot that sent "The Game" to the ring apron. He then picked up a chair and delivered a brutal series of blows to Triple H's back. As the match continued, more and more weapons were employed, and Foley himself even brought Mr. Socko out. Things came to an end when the "Cerebral Assassin" nailed Nash with a sledgehammer and hit the Pedigree to retain his title.

Triple H vs. Shawn Michaels

Bad Blood, June 13, 2004

Less than a year after defeating Kevin Nash, "The Game" faced off against another former ally, Shawn Michaels. The resulting match would prove to be one of the most vicious and draining encounters of the year, as the two warriors battled for over 47 minutes inside the demonic structure. Both men suffered injuries as a result of the brutality that ensued, with Triple H targeting HBK's back and Michaels connecting with a bone-rattling elbow drop off the top of a ladder, driving "The Game" through a table. Ultimately, the Pedigree once again brought victory for Triple H. ■

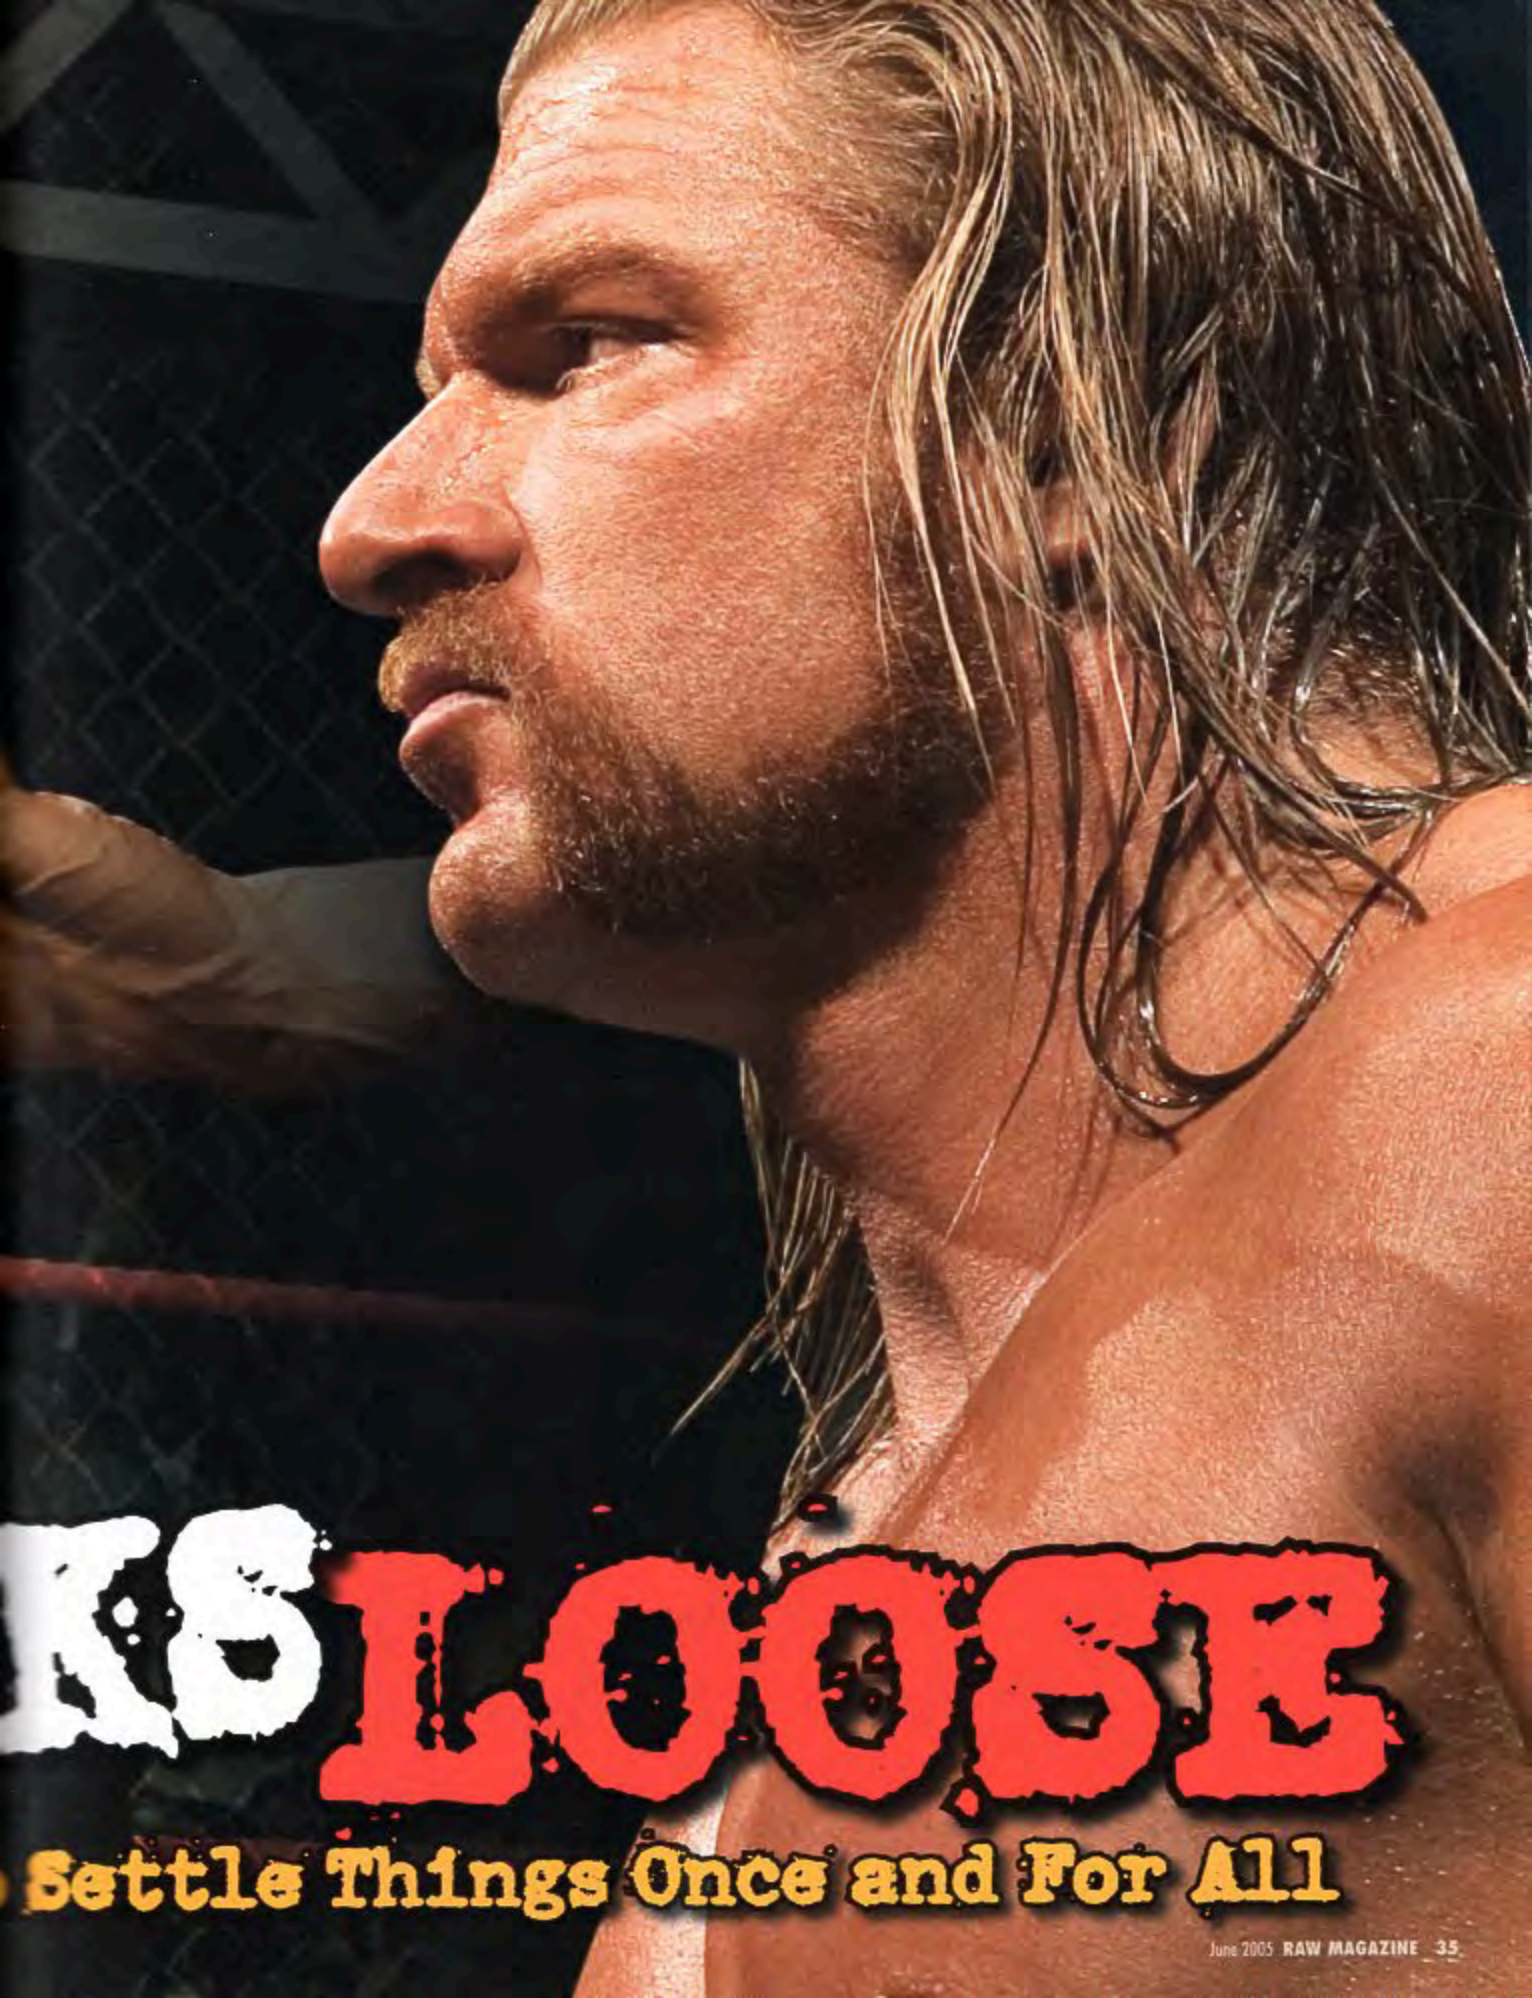
Batista and Triple H Step into the Cell t



KS LOOSE

Settle Things Once and For All

Imagine for a moment: you're locked inside a two-ton, 20-foot-high steel cell with nowhere to run. You can't escape, you can't call for help, and you certainly can't beg for mercy.

The only way out is to fight your way through your opponent and leave him lying in a bloody heap before he does the same to you.

Now, imagine having a 2x4 wrapped in barbed wire collide with your skull. Imagine being sent crashing through a table, rammed against a steel ladder or pounded into near-unconsciousness against the steel walls.

Welcome to Hell in a Cell.

Only one man has endured these punishments and emerged from the Cell victorious time and time again, and that man is Triple H. "The Game" is a battle-scarred veteran of five Hell in a Cell matches. Inside that unforgiving structure, he's been repeatedly beaten and broken. But in a one-on-one situation, he's never lost.

"Hell in a Cell is the one match in which I have completely dominated," says "The Game" proudly. "No one can touch what I've accomplished inside that Cell."

At Vengeance, he'll have an opportunity to further demonstrate his dominance inside the Cell and, if history repeats itself, Triple H will walk out with his 11th World Championship. Only one thing stands in his way: Batista.

Since Batista won the World Heavyweight Championship from his former friend at WrestleMania 21, "The Game" has done everything he possibly can to get it back. And no matter how close he's gotten, it's continued to elude him.

However, the "Cerebral Assassin" maintains, everything that has come before pales in comparison to what awaits Batista when he steps into that Cell.

"Batista has never seen me go all the way," Triple H says. "Now I'm going to go all the way, and Hell in a Cell is the place to do it."

For Batista, who has never competed in a Hell in a Cell match, the reality is that he will enter this match as something of an underdog.

"My disadvantage is that I lack experience," Batista says. "I can't match what Triple H has done in the ring, or in that Cell, for that matter. He's one of the greatest competitors of all time, and the Cell is his territory. Nevertheless, I still plan on being the one to walk out as World Heavyweight Champion."

Still, Batista learned a lot in the time he spent under the tutelage of "The Game." And he believes that knowledge of Triple H is part of what will lead him to victory.

"I rolled with Triple H for two years," Batista says. "I know what he's about, and I know what I'm up against. It's something I'm prepared to deal with."

Of course, one of the key components of Hell in a Cell is that once those doors are locked, there is no getting in and no getting out. Both men relish the fact that for the first time, they will be able to face one another with no distractions. For "The Game," this is a chance to give his former ally the punishment that Triple H feels he so richly deserves.

"There will be no outside interference, there will be nobody to stop me," Triple H says, his voice rising in intensity. "The ref goes down? I'll just beat on Batista until the ref wakes back up."

"I rolled with Triple H for two years. I know what he's about, and I know what I'm up against."

Batista sees the match as the pinnacle of his career. "The Game" has never been defeated in the Cell, whereas Batista has never set foot inside it. To take the "Cerebral Assassin" down on his own turf would be a victory for Batista on many levels, and would finally establish his dominance over his one-time mentor. But before that can happen, it's all about the punishment and the pain.

"I go into every match with the same mindset, and that's 'search and destroy,'" Batista says. "Two of us will go into the Cell, and the better man will come out champion—and I believe that will be me."

In the weeks since WrestleMania 21, "The Animal" has found himself relentlessly pursued by Triple H, whose desire to retake the title borders on the fanatical.

"I don't think there'll ever be an end to it," Batista says of Triple H's title quest. "I hold something that he is obsessed with and can't live without. I think as long as there's a breath in his body, he'll always desire this championship."

However, as far as "The Game" is concerned, his 11th World title reign is just one finishing maneuver away. He has long maintained that Batista has no answer for the Pedigree. At Backlash, Batista was laid out for nearly 10 seconds after Triple H nailed him with his signature move. Unfortunately for "The Game," referee Mike Chioda was knocked unconscious and unable to make the three-count. Looking back on that night, the "Cerebral Assassin" is still seething.

"The match was a joke, plain and simple," he says angrily. "The whole world saw it. I did what I said I would do, and I proved what I've been saying since WrestleMania 21. One Pedigree, and it was over. I hit Batista with it, and he was done. I had him pinned and beaten. Incompetent officials unable to do their job are the only reason I am not the World Heavyweight Champion right now.

Kevin Nash falls victim to Triple H inside the Cell.

"Batista is the luckiest man alive," he says simply.

Since then, Triple H says, Batista has been living on borrowed time. However, at Vengeance, it's time to collect.

"Batista is scared," Triple H says. "He's trying to stay away from me. But, in Hell in a Cell, there is no escape. There's no way out, no possible place for him to run, and no place to hide."

"I will destroy Batista inside the Cell."

Leading into Vengeance, "The Animal" has been trying to prepare himself both physically and mentally. Although he's never entered the Cell, he has been part of an Elimination Chamber Match, something that's given him a sense of what he's up against.

"They're similar, in that you have that feeling of being trapped," Batista says. "But there were a lot of factors in that match, especially with so many other people in there. This time, it's one-on-one."

He's also keeping in mind the two previous people to face Triple H in the Cell, Kevin Nash and Shawn Michaels. Both were former world champions, both were one-time allies of "The Game," and both became victims of Triple H's ferocity inside the Cell.

"Hell in a Cell is a whole other level," Batista says. "For two incredible competitors like Kevin Nash and Shawn Michaels to go down in the Cell tells me that it's a whole different ballgame. I'm going to have to be at my best, because I know Triple H will be."

unleashed in that Cell.

"I will destroy Batista inside the Cell," Triple H says. "The unfortunate thing for him is, not only will he walk out without the title, he'll be lucky to walk out at all."

Of course, "The Game" is relying not only on the fury of the match itself, but also on what he perceives as its only possible conclusion.

"Sooner or later, it will come down to a Pedigree, and I will be an 11-time World Champion," he says plainly.

In fact, the "Cerebral Assassin" says he'll make sure that Batista will receive a Pedigree. Even if his former Evolution cohort is pounded, bloodied and beaten, "The Game" intends to make the Pedigree the exclamation point to end the match.

"To prove a point," he says, "I will make sure that the last thing Batista sees before he goes out is that Pedigree."

While many competitors balk at facing someone as ruthless, dedicated and focused as Triple H inside the Cell, Batista insists he is ready. What's more, he says Triple H knows how ready he is, a fact that is sure to make the match even more intense.

There was a time, says Batista, when Triple H saw him as merely the student, but that time has passed. Since he won the Royal Rumble, Batista has smashed his way to the top, beating Triple H first at WrestleMania 21 and then at Backlash.

Whatever claims Triple H may make, it can no longer be denied that Batista is a force. With the title around his waist, it's a fact.

"I think Triple H no longer believes my winning was a fluke," he says. "I think he knows how much heart and desire I have."

In addition, he says, Triple H now understands how much Batista absorbed as a member of Evolution.

"He's beginning to realize how much I've learned from him," Batista says. "My ears and eyes were open, and I was listening and learning and soaking up knowledge."

To have their loyal enforcer suddenly rise to become a dominant competitor in his own right was a fact that no doubt took Triple H and Ric Flair by surprise.

"I don't think they ever saw me coming," Batista says with a smile.

Should he win at Vengeance, Batista will have accomplished something no one man has ever done—defeat Triple H in a Hell in a Cell. The feat would cement his reputation as perhaps the most dominant competitor in WWE history. And while he tries to keep a clear head about the events that will unfold in Las Vegas, it's clear that he knows what's at stake.

"Being the World Heavyweight Champion symbolizes that you are the best and is an unfathomable honor," Batista says. "But it also means that all eyes are on you and that everyone is gunning for you, just like Triple H is. I'll do whatever it takes to keep the title. Triple H will have to leave me lifeless in the Cell in order to take it back."

When it comes to fighting hard to win or keep titles, one needs to look no further than "The Game." He insists that title or no title, his track record as WWE's greatest Superstar is concrete.

"You name it, I've done it," Triple H says. "I am the most decorated athlete in the history of this business, bar none. Icon, legend—these labels get thrown around a lot. But there are not a lot of guys who can legitimately claim to have dominated a business."

So, with all he's accomplished, everything he's proven time and again, why is this Hell in a Cell match so important? To Triple H, the name says it all: Vengeance. Batista has gone on too long without answering for his transgressions against Evolution, and the Cell will be the place where he'll pay for his sins, says "The Game."

In fact, he encourages those who have rallied behind "The Animal" to tune in on June 26 and watch their hero fall.

"Once we are in that Cell," Triple H says, teeth clenched, "I will beat Batista within an inch of his life, I will end him once and for all, and I will walk out of that Cell with the World Heavyweight Championship." ■

Endgame

By Jeremy Brown & Kevin Sullivan

With a deafening thunderclap of pyro, the opening bars of Trust Company's "Stronger," and the roar of a capacity crowd, Backlash kicked off, quite literally, with a bang. And the momentum generated by the frenzied crowd continued as Chris Jericho's music hit and Y2J took to the ramp as columns of fire exploded up from the stage.

With the Intercontinental Championship on the line, Jericho was hoping Backlash would mark the beginning of a long winning streak. But it would not be easy, as Jericho was up against the same man that defeated him for the Intercontinental Championship in October 2004: Shelton Benjamin.

Early in the match, Jericho executed a breath-taking hurricanrana off the edge of the ring to the outside. The move floored Benjamin, but also took a toll on Y2J, who fell directly on his neck while executing it. A motionless Jericho led many to believe the match would be forced to a premature end.

Y2J dug deep down to fight his way back, but Benjamin was not going to let up. The Intercontinental Champion executed moves never before seen in a WWE ring, clearly showing off his amazing athleticism, springboarding off the ropes and executing a vertical leap from the mat to the top rope to deliver a superplex. In the end, it was Benjamin's athleticism overcoming Jericho's desire. A dejected Y2J refused interviews after the match.

Tag Team Turmoil certainly lived up to its name, at least for William Regal & Tajiri, who saw their title reign end at the hands of La Résistance. At first, the champions held their own, battling their way through the Heart Throbs and Simon Dean & Maven. However, La Résistance proved too much for the duo, as Robert Conway rolled up Regal to guarantee a title change. As it turned out, the night belonged to the superheroes. The Hurricane & Rosey shocked the Manchester, N.H. crowd when Rosey climbed to the second turnbuckle and launched The Hurricane off his shoulders for a splash on Conway to win the titles.

Tired of seeing their rivalry spill out of the ring, Raw General Manager Eric Bischoff ordered a Last Man Standing Match for Chris Benoit and Edge, aka "Mr. Money in the Bank." The idea was to finally settle the score between these two Superstars. In the end, however, it may have just intensified it.

Edge promised that he would be the last man standing in his match with Benoit. What fans didn't know is just how far he'd go to ensure that.

Both Benoit and Edge used whatever was within reach to aide them in their attempt to keep the other down for a 10-count, including trash cans and a 15-foot ladder. Edge was able to gain an advantage when he warded off Benoit's suicide dive attempt with a garbage can lid to the head that sent the Crippler down for an eight-count.

Benoit was able to get the upper hand by locking in a Sharpshooter that made Edge tap out. However, in a Last Man Standing Match, tapping out does you little good. Edge, seeing the direction the match was headed, turned up the heat. In the end, it was Edge's briefcase that was responsible for the final fall. Many assumed that Edge was simply using it to carry his contract for a future opportunity at the World Heavyweight Championship. Benoit learned differently the hard way when Edge pulled a brick from the case and clobbered the Rabid Wolverine with it. The blow kept Benoit down for the 10-count, giving "Mr. Money in the Bank" the win.

"The Masterpiece" Chris Masters made his presence felt in Manchester. Interrupting an interview segment between Jerry "the King" Lawler and the Divas, Masters announced that he had upped the ante in his Masterlock Challenge. Should anyone be able to break the hold, Masters said, they would now be $3,000 richer.

A local woman opted to take the Challenge, but proved to be another victim of the Masterlock. Masters smugly left her laid out in the ring, and walked out with his money still safely in hand.

She wasn't the only woman to be left lying in the ring. Trish Stratus found herself the victim of an attack by Viscera after she berated him over his loss to Kane. At first, Viscera held his own against the Kane, as he connected with a clothesline and a Samoan drop for a two-count. The two behemoths continued to battle, pounding each other with unmatched ferocity. No one can deny that Viscera brought the fight to Kane, but it was Kane's overwhelming chokeslam that finally marked the end of Viscera's hopes of winning and spending the night with Trish.

Trish tore into Viscera. She called him a failure and scoffed at the notion that she would ever be romantically involved with him. The verbal assault raised Viscera's ire, and he grabbed Trish in a bear hug as the crowd, feeling she was getting what she deserved, went wild. He then delivered a punishing splash, and Trish was taken from the ring via stretcher.

Although Backlash served up countless memorable moments, it was clear to everyone that the night belonged to the Immortal One. As Hulk Hogan entered the ring to team with Shawn Michaels against Muhammad Hassan and Khosrow Daivari, the Verizon Wireless Arena crowd exploded into a wild ovation, giving Hogan a well-deserved hero's welcome.

Hogan's Backlash match would have to be thought of as one of the biggest returns in recent history. Just one month prior, Hogan was being inducted into the WWE Hall of Fame. During the emotional induction ceremony, WWE fans pleaded for "one more match" from the Hulkster. Never one to let his Hulkamaniacs down, Hogan agreed to team up with HBK in his continued effort to put Hassan and Daivari in their place. And as the crowd roared their approval, it was clear to everyone there that this was something special.

Despite Backlash marking the first time Hogan and Michaels teamed up, the legendary duo were clearly clicking on all cylinders. HBK was his usual showstopping self inside the ring and Hogan looked just as impressive as the last time fans saw him compete. With the capacity crowd on its feet, the Hulkster went to drop the big leg on Daivari. Unfortunately for Hogan, however, Hassan viciously rammed a steel pipe into his back, which quickly silenced the Hulkamaniacs in attendance.

The dastardly attack only managed to slow Hogan down for a brief period of time. The WWE Hall of Famer was soon able to "Hulk up" and jump back on the offensive. Anticipating the end was near, the crowd once again rose. With the arena going crazy, HBK delivered Sweet Chin Music to Daivari. Hogan then capitalized on the move, covering his opponent for the victory. After tossing the two out of the ring, Hogan & Michaels celebrated with the crowd. Adding to the revelry, they even brought a fan sporting a full tattoo of Hogan on his back, into the ring to join in the celebration.

In the weeks leading up to Triple H vs. Batista II—one of the most anticipated rematches in recent Raw history—"The Game" claimed that he simply needed to hit his Pedigree finisher on Batista one time in order to be victorious and become an 11-time World Champion. Few could argue "The Game's" cocky claims, as many of sports-entertainment's top names have fallen victim to the devastating finisher—Shawn Michaels, Mick Foley, Kurt Angle, Big Show and the Rock are just a few of the names on the long list of victims.

At Backlash, Triple H did everything in his power to add Batista to the infamous list of fallen Superstars. In fact, "The Game" attempted to hit the World Heavyweight Champion with the Pedigree on five different occasions. Only one Pedigree, however, landed. But according to Triple H, he would only need to land one Pedigree to become World Heavyweight Champion. He was right.

Luckily for Batista, Mike Chioda—the official assigned to the main event match—was knocked unconscious at the time Batista was floored by the Pedigree. As a result, it was impossible to administer the three-count Triple H needed to gain the win and the World Heavyweight Championship. By the time the referee had regained consciousness, Batista had recovered from the impact of the Pedigree. A shocked Triple H soon found himself on the receiving end of a Batista Bomb, which was followed by the three-count.

After the match, an enraged Game delivered the Pedigree to the referee and even aggressively shoved longtime ally Ric Flair. Clearly, Triple H's inability to pick up his 11th reign as World Champion, even after landing the Pedigree, brought "The Game" to the boiling point.

So it ends. Almost a month to the day after he won the World Heavyweight Championship at WrestleMania 21, Batista battled through and retained his title. But the question remains, had Chioda not been unconscious, would Triple H have earned his 11th World title? Can Batista face the Pedigree and walk away unscathed? These are the questions most likely running through the mind of "The Game," and, most likely, the mind of Batista, as well.

Whatever happens now, it's clear that the fight between these two former allies is not over. And Vengeance is a dish best served cold. ■

COACH'S CORNER

"For the last 20 years, it's a fact that some of the most recognizable figures in the world have come from right here in our backyard. And many have made quite a splash in Hollywood."

— Jonathan Coachman

CELLULOID HEROES

You know, they say that sometimes people don't realize something until it jumps up and hits them in the face. Well, I think after everything WWE has done in Hollywood over the course of the last year, it's time for the hobby-snobby West Coast to stand up and recognize.

For the last 20 years it's a fact that some of the most recognizable figures in the world have come from right here in our backyard. And many have made quite a splash in Hollywood.

For example, I'm not a fan of The Rock, and hope that one day I come face to face with him again. But, make no mistake about it, he has made himself a bona fide Hollywood leading man, and it all started right here in WWE.

And how many guys can say they have gone toe to toe with Wesley Snipes and lived to tell about it? Triple H can. And you better believe that although it was the first, Blade: Trinity will not be the last stop in Tinseltown for "The Game."

Then there's Stone Cold Steve Austin. Perhaps the best big-screen presence we have produced to date. With his role in Nash Bridges and his turn in Adam Sandler's The Longest Yard, there is no telling how far the Texas Rattlesnake can go.

And, of course, there is the all-time greatest performance by any Superstar to date: Hulk Hogan playing Thunderlips in the greatest sports movie of all time, Rocky III, 23 years ago.

My point is this: Are you trying to tell me that over the course of the last 20 years, with all of the supremely talented Superstars and personalities in and out of the ring, that there are just a handful of Hollywood success stories to talk about?

Let me tell you something. We have more talented performers in one building on a weekly basis—and, of course, I include myself in this—than Hollywood could ever think about putting together on any given day. I honestly believe that.

Let me tell you something else. "The Coach" spent a week in L.A. for WrestleMania 21, rubbing elbows, noses and a few other things with the Hollywood elite. It was painfully obvious to me that many, if not all, of those with any stroke in La-La Land knew that they've been making big mistakes for a very long time.

If you close your eyes for a just a second, it's easy to imagine Superstars like "Captain Charisma," The Hurricane, Chris Jericho, Edge, and, of course, "The Coach," up on the big screen. I could go on and on about being given an opportunity or a chance, but I won't. I only make my point this month so that all of you know that there is a least one unbelievably talented author, announcer and Superstar personality out there who's going to stop talkin' and start walkin'.

Those of us who want it have to now go out and start taking it. The Rock, "The Game," and The Rattlesnake didn't wait for it to come to them. They stuck their chests out, and went and got it. I dare some of my peers to start doing the same.

And, in closing this month, I dare you at home to start doing the same as well. The only one standing in the way of you being great is you. I don't want to hear any more crying and moaning. Just shut up and start getting the job done. As for me, I gotta go. There's another Diva Search winner to crown.

Halle. Call me. ■

Take a globetrotting Motocross tour as MX World Tour Featuring Jamie Little sends you to competitions around the world with every type of terrain imaginable.

MX World Tour Featuring Jamie Little

Platform: PlayStation 2, Xbox
Publisher: Crave Entertainment

Your first inclination is to flinch. With so much dirt and mud flying about and with dirt bikes roaring around you, and in some cases, over you, a clear field of vision is a priority. The dirt, however, is confined to your TV. But the raw power and carnage of MX World Tour Featuring Jamie Little simply cannot be contained so easily.

Perhaps the game's strongest selling point is, well, its selling point. With a suggested manufacturer's retail price of $19.95, MX World Tour Featuring Jamie Little represents value in a hotly contested marketplace where gamers' wallets aren't always a top concern of manufacturers. But don't let the price make you doubt the game's overall quality—it's more than worth the investment.

Most games in the discount category cut corners with graphics. Sometimes it's the compromise manufacturers must make to keep the retail price low. But MX World Tour Featuring Jamie Little doesn't fall into that trip. Simply put, the visuals are quite good. Having the sun in your eyes during sunset while traveling at breakneck speed amid hairpin turns has never been quite as enjoyable.

The game caters to all levels of gamers. Exhibition mode and quick start race mode are good places for novices to gain skills, but the game's real payoff is in career mode.

Competing against 11 riders in Motocross courses (stadiums), Supercross (outside) and SuperMoto (which combines asphalt and dirt tracks), MX World Tour Featuring Jamie Little provides quite a challenge. The courses are inventive and the series takes you to tracks throughout the world. Ever wonder what it might be like to tear up some turf alongside the Great Wall of China? Look no further—it's in there.

You can also upgrade your bike to increase horsepower and handling, which makes the game experience expand and grow as the player's skills develop.

Little, widely regarded as the voice of Motocross, lends her talents to the game. Not only does she provide voice-over commentary, but she also gets on the bike and mixes it up with the world's best riders. In addition, a hard-pounding soundtrack keeps the action revved up.

MX World Tour Featuring Jamie Little quenches gamers' need for speed, and at an affordable price. So feel free to satisfy your jones to catch some air and crash and burn in the safety of your own home on PlayStation 2 and Xbox, and keep your spleen in its protective packaging. ■
